Public Service Announce Broad Promotional Plan

A broad promotional program to stimulate postwar industrial, commercial, agricultural and residential development of Chicago and northern Illinois in cooperation with the Public Service Company of Northern Illinois in cooperation with the Commonwealth Edison Co., Western Illinois Gas and Electric Co. and Illinois Northern Utilities Co. was disclosed today by Britton I. Eadd, Public Service Co. president.

Backbone of the activity, plans for which have been underway for nearly a year, will be an intensive national and local advertising campaign in newspapers and magazines which will emphasize the area's numerous strategic advantages for the location of industry.

The first ad is scheduled to appear around August 8 and the series to follow will continue at least thru out the balance of 1945 and thru 1946 it was said.

The sponsoring group of companies supplies electric service in Chicago and both electric and gas service in a territory embracing nearly 11,000 square miles extending from Chicago across northern Illinois.

As an aid to business, agriculture and industry, a territorial information department has been established by the group in the Marquette building, 140 S. Dearborn St., Chicago to assemble and make available factual data concerning the area. This research staff will cooperate in its work with local chambers of commerce, civic groups and other agencies interested in the progress and prosperity of the territory.

Designed to attract new industries as well as hold those which now operate war production plants in the territory, the companies' advertising campaign will focus attention on the area's inherent economic and geographic advantages.

Chicago and northern Illinois, it will be pointed out is the population and transportation hub of the nation, the "great central market," the leader in the manufacture of iron and steel, outstanding in the production and processing of foods and a top ranking financial center. The area's "adequate supply" of labor, electric power, gas, oil and coal reserves, and other resources will also be stressed.

Tinley Park Delving Into Local History For Centennial

Very soon the history of Tinley Park will be gathered and put into booklet form from which will be created the background of the Centennial celebration to be held at Saenger Hall Grove on October 5, 6 and 7. The preliminary plans will take us back to the early days of Tinley Park and carry us thru the years to the present time. The final day of the celebration will bring us up to date and will be climaxed by a parade bringing out the progress thru the years.

Entertainment will be furnished, there will be never a dull moment. To make it pleasant for everyone the Committee is arranging for a sound system which will enable everyone to hear at all times just what is going on in the various parts of the grove.

There will be rides and games the like of which we have not seen before. One of the largest amusement companies in the country has been contracted for and they promise the best in equipment.

Mementos will be sold as souvenirs and prizes will be given away during the three day celebration. There will be food and refreshments aplenty to whet the appetite of all.

Seldom does a community have the opportunity to celebrate its 100th birthday for such a worthwhile cause. All funds from this celebration are to be used to complete the purchase of the property for a memorial recreation park and for improvement of the ground. The celebration is being sponsored by the Tinley Park Recreation Commission with the active support and help of every organization of the Community.

Lighting Bolt Dazes Men In Tinley Garage

The south side of Tinley Park experienced plenty of excitement Tuesday night about 9:30 o'clock during a thunderstorm when a very brilliant and electricity scattering bolt of lightning struck a tree near the Henry Bechstein garage.

Working in the garage on repair welding work were Robt. Schuldt, Ralph Homering, Mark Talmadge and Henry Bechstein. When the bolt struck all were stunned more or less from the heavy charge of electrical current coming in thru opened doors. The men said they had a peculiar prickly feeling when the lightning struck. The crash seemed to have three charges which had rapid machine gun like reports.

Dick Bruening who resides diagonally across the street from the Bechstein garage said he was closing an upstairs window facing toward the garage when suddenly a great ball of fire went sailing by and he was momentarily blinded by the brilliant light. He suffered from shock also.

A neighbor to the east of the garage was knocked down on his knees by the concussion of the bolt.

In the Edw. Henke home directly north of the garage fire sputtered from the electric light fixtures when the bolt struck, but no damage was done to the fixtures or the house.

All those who experienced the shock conceded they did not wish to experience a similar case.

Games will be arranged and prizes will be awarded to the winners. Everyone can enter into the fun for a most enjoyable day in the woods. Soft drinks will be furnished by the Recreation Commission which is sponsoring the picnic. Here is a chance to meet people of the community you have never met before.

The schedule of the time of leaving will be posted. Look for it and make your arrangements to attend this get together of the whole community of Tinley Park.

COOK COUNTY TREASURER PLAYS HOST TO 32 COUNTRY TOWN COLLECTORS

Cook County Treasurer Victor L. Schlaeger played host to 32 Country Town Collectors at a dinner given in the Morrison hotel, in Chicago, Tuesday night. Schlaeger lauded the collectors for their fine work in helping him collect more than $140,000,000 in 1944 first installment taxes and their especially fine cooperation in bringing in delinquent taxes.

In turn the collectors voted Schlaeger administration 100 percent and termed him the most efficient treasurer the county has had in a long, long time. Democrats and Republicans alike declared they were more than pleased to work with Schlaeger and that his co-operation stood tops in line of duty.

The party was strictly a get-together good time affair. Schlaeger invited the 32 collectors to his office within the next two weeks when they will discuss ways and means of cleaning up the back taxes and the operation of the Scavenger Act, under which law he hopes to establish a new record for delinquent collections.

The collectors in general agreed in their praise of Schlaeger that he not only has set an all time record for collections, but that his method of working and cooperating with other collectors makes the job a pleasant one.

Fishes in His Private Pool

It is not every boy that has his own private fishing pool. This young farm boy baits hook hopefully and prepares to fish in the family pond. Private waters like these can be used the year around, and hundreds of inland farm kids who never had a chance to fish are growing up into a larger generation of sportsmen. The government has encouraged building of private ponds. Some states, such as Missouri, offer special inducements for farm ponds, not only stocking with fish but supplying at cost shade trees and water plants for the ponds. Even in postwar, the addition of fish to the farm diet will be welcomed.

Bringing Them Back Home Again

TRUMAN COMMITTEE CARRIES ON

Senators Kilgore of West Virginia (Dem.) and Brewster of Maine (Rep.) had an interesting experience while probing conditions in Germany for the Mead committee, formerly the Truman committee. Calling at the headquarters of Lt. Gen. Alexander M. Patch, they were received courteously by the general himself, who talked with them for ten minutes, then went off to keep an appointment.

The two senators then proceeded with their usual investigation. Settling down in one of the U. S. military offices, they called in witnesses, and cross-examined them with a stenographer taking down everything that was said.

This continued for nearly three hours. Unlike most visitors, Senators Kilgore and Brewster seemed intent on really finding out what was happening in that part of occupied Germany. Finally, Gen. Arthur White, chief of staff to General Patch, appeared nervously in the background.

"Gentlemen," he said, "ahem... this procedure... it's a little unusual. I'm not sure that we can permit you to continue."

"It's the same procedure we've always followed," replied Senator Brewster.

"Yes," continued Kilgore, "it's the same procedure followed by this committee under former Chairman Truman."

"You probably recall him," added Brewster, "he's now President of the United States."

Next day General Patch himself invited the two senators to dine with him at the villa which he had taken over from a German princess.

JUDICIAL EXIT

There was a day when everyone in and around the Roosevelt administration wanted to be a judge. This ambition was largely precipitated by the Supreme court fight and the fact that the courts in those days had put several obstructive decisions squarely across the path of the New Deal.

But now it is just the opposite. There is a growing exit from the courts. Judge Schwellenbach has just resigned, from the bench to be secretary of labor. Judge Sherman Minton is itching to get off the circuit court of appeals in Chicago. And there will soon be four vacancies on the court of appeals of the District of Columbia, considered one of the most important courts in the country.

Judges Vinson and Thurman Arnold have already made two vacancies on this court. Two other vacancies will occur when Chief Justice Duncan Groner and Judge Justin Miller resign.

It may keep the White House busy looking for good men to take their places.

ITALIAN UNDERGROUND

It is not often that anyone can get a first hand report on the results of psychological warfare direct from his own family in an enemy country. However, Ugo Carusi, director of immigration and naturalization, has had that experience.

Carusi came to this country as a small boy from the marble quarries of northern Italy, went to work in the marble quarries of Vermont, and got to know Harlan F. Stone, who brought him to the justice department when Stone became attorney general under Coolidge.

And during the war, Carusi has been broadcasting to the Italian people urging them to surrender. With the end of the war, Carusi has received letters from his relatives in Italy telling how his broadcasts helped inspire the battle against the Nazis.

"Ugo," wrote a cousin, "you can really be proud of your relatives here in Italy. From the oldest down to that little, charming young lady (Carusi's 10-year-old niece) you were always so happy to hold in your lap while in Carrara, they have proven themselves to be great patriots."

"One of your cousins, the brother of Enrico, was the colonel who led a Partigiani band in the capture of Carrara from the Germans last November. From that time on, the Partigiani controlled all the public offices in the town. The caves with which you are familiar were used to good advantage by the Partigiani, and the Nazis refrained from re-entering the city."

WAR NOTES

Despite the heavy bombing of the Schweinfurt ball-bearing plant, inside sources reveal that it is in reasonably good condition and within one month could be producing 50 per cent of its wartime schedule. The Nazis had removed a lot of Schweinfurt's intricate machinery before the air raids, and hidden it. The manager of the plant told U. S. officials that within three or four months he could be turning out 20 per cent more ball-bearings than during the war.

New Development in Poultry Buildings

Asbestos and Mineral Wool Used Effectively

Something new and modern in poultry house construction can be found on the Tenderex farms at Middletown, Ky.

The farm was planned with the co-operation of the Stoker Poultry company. The decision to build durable buildings having long life with low maintenance, led to exhaustive and careful study and experimentation. The results found are of interest to farmers generally. Using Gothic-type house, prefabricated arch construction, with the framing for the roof and wall combined in one unit, not only was a saving made in original costs, but considerable saving was effected in future heating costs.

The 33 houses on the Tenderex farms are all 24 by 30 feet, with the continuous arches anchored to a concrete foundation. Sheathing is of tongue and groove covered with thick butt asphalt shingles. These type shingles are easily moulded to the contour of any roof. Their gray tone offers harmonious contrast with the red hollow tile used in the end walls.

Mineral wool was selected to insulate the interior wall, which is lined with asbestos board.

To eliminate dampness, the floor consists of cinder fill and four inches of hollow tile, topped with 2½ inches of concrete.

An important factor in selecting asphalt shingles, concrete, hollow tile, mineral wool and asbestos board was the fire-resistant construction these materials provide.

Postwar Machinery Pickup Baler

This is an automatic self-feeding, self-tying baler with bale separation making it a one man operation job. Neatly formed and firm bales of sliced hay weighing 40 to 65 pounds can be turned out at the rate of three to five bales per minute.

It is designed primarily for wind-row pickup baling. The construction saves leaves and assures that all the hay is carried into the bale chamber. It is a McCormick-Deering postwar improvement.

Danger! Sheep Scab

May Be on Way Back

Will sheep scab stage another comeback—once more causing millions of dollars in losses, as it did a few years ago?

Dr. Floyd Cross of the American Veterinary Medical association and government authorities report such a possibility. "The condition is present to an alarming extent in the Midwest," Dr. Cross reports.

If sheep show loss of wool, formation of scabs on the skin, or a tendency to rub against fences and pens, the condition should be called to the attention of a veterinarian. Through greatly diminished wool production, loss in body weight, general unthriftiness and death, scabies play their toll.

The scab is caused by a small mite, barely visible to the unaided eye, but can be brought under effective control.

The only effective treatment is the external application of some medicinal agent that will kill the scab mites. This can be best accomplished by dipping, followed by isolation. The dips recommended by the USDA are made from lime-sulfur or nicotine.

Fumigation Practices

Carbon disulphide is the most common fumigant used on the farm. It is a liquid that quickly evaporates into a heavier-than-air gas. Operators should avoid inhaling the vapors or spilling the liquid on clothing. Extreme caution must be taken against fire.

Do not fumigate when the temperature is below 60 degrees. It is best to start late in the afternoon when the air is calm. It will take 24 hours.

Thunderhead

MARY O'HARA
W.N.U. FEATURES

THE STORY THUS FAR: Thunderhead is the only white horse ever foaled on the Goose Bar ranch in Wyoming. He resembles his great grandsire, a wild stallion called the Albino. His 13-year-old owner, Ken McLaughlin, hopes his horse will develop into a racer because of his remarkable speed. Thunderhead, however, is difficult to handle, and plans for entering him in a fall race meet are uncertain. Rob McLaughlin, Ken's father, needing ready cash for Ken and Howard's tuition and other bills, takes 14 horses to an auction in Denver. He gets poor prices, and is depressed, until he meets Gilroy, an eastern horse buyer. Gilroy's attention is drawn to the high class of the McLaughlin animals.

CHAPTER XVII

"I don't know."
"He in de east still?"
"No. In Laramie."
"Laramie! Ven he get back?"
"I don't know exactly. But it was in the paper about a week ago."
Gus leaned to brush up a few more imaginary ashes. "You come down in kitchen, Missus. I'm getting some lunch."

"All right, Gus. Is it lunch time?"
In the warm kitchen Gus moved about efficiently and set a cup of hot strong tea on the red-checked tablecloth before her, some baked beans, well-flavored, topped with crisp browned salt pork, and some of her own bread, toasted on top of the stove.

Sitting opposite her, stirring his tea, his pale blue eyes studied her thoughtfully. "You sick, Missus?"
"No, Gus."

"You going to ride dis afternoon?"
"I don't know." She looked at the food before her and took her fork in her hand, then felt her stomach shrink and close. Her belts had grown very loose these days; her slacks hung on her hips.

Gus appeared to be giving thought to nothing but the demolishing of the great pile of beans on his plate. "If you cud get a jackrabbit—de chickens needs meat—"

Nell drank a little of her tea and set the cup down. "Well—I might. Later in the afternoon."

"I saddle Gypsy for you, Missus." Nell stirred her tea, staring a hole through the tablecloth.

"Dot Gypsy—she's wid foal."

"Yes, I know."

"Und de boss, he don' want she should have no more foals."

"She must have been bred before he took her away from Banner last spring—early."

"Ya. Und dot mean she's foal dis winter."

Nell buttered a small piece of toast, made herself eat it.

"You don't like de beans, Missus?"

"I like them, Gus, but I'm not hungry."

She went upstairs again and slowly tidied her room, with many pauses to stand at the window. The bleak skies and the colorless world looked back at her balefully.

Later in the afternoon she put on her black woolen jodhpurs and her warm gray tweed jacket. A few strokes of the comb through her hair drew it back and she fastened it in a little bun, brushing her bang smooth and drew on her small black visored cap. As she picked up her felt-lined gloves and the red scarf for her throat she suddenly wanted to hurry and get out of that house.

Galloping along the county road, Gypsy pricked her ears and turned her head toward the Saddle Back.

"No, you don't, old girl—we're not going up there."

Gypsy whinnied, getting the wind from the bank of brood mares beyond the crest, but Nell pressed her spur against her and held her in the road.

She counted the time since Rob had left on September tenth. It was nearly a month. Figuring four days for the trip to Pennsylvania, then a week or ten days for the sale, and two days for the trip back—that would have brought it to September twenty-sixth. Where had he been since then? Laramie, apparently, just twenty-five miles away. And hadn't come home. Hadn't even written. And here it was the second week in October.

Reaching the bank of Deer Creek, Gypsy was belly deep in dried brown grass. She grunted softly and turned her head toward the water. Nell sat relaxed in the saddle while the mare waded into the stream, her feet sinking deep in the soft gravel, and the fresh and delicious smell of water and damp earth and autumn leaves wafted up and made Nell wonder why, now, everything that was sweet sent a sharp pain through her heart.

Long wheezing sucks came from Gypsy. Two magpies were quarreling in a tree overhead. And a little way off there was frantic yipping from Kim as he chased a rabbit. The cocker never yipped nor would he let a rabbit draw him into a hopeless chase. He knew in advance where the rabbit would go and intercepted it.

Nell lifted Gypsy's head, turned her, and the mare scrambled up the bank, scattering water from her hoofs and her mouth. And as she resumed her canter, Nell resumed the argument. Rob had been in Laramie about two weeks and hadn't let her know. Why? Didn't he want to see her?

The dogs had vanished completely. Often they started out on a ride with her, were led off by rabbits or exciting scents and disappeared. She wouldn't see them again until she got home and found them panting on the terrace.

At the thought that Rob did not want to come home her mind spun around to his point of view. How was he thinking and feeling? Was he suffering too? Oh, I hope so, I hope so, for if he loves me he couldn't help it. But does he? He could come to me, but I couldn't go to him. Or could I? She thought of herself driving down to Laramie, going about hunting for her husband—No. No! She tingled with shame. She had to wait here, but how long? Yes—how long? Until he decided to come back. She was entirely helpless.

As these thoughts chased each other through her mind, her body and her nerves were played upon as if by little whips. Alternately hot and cold—weak, or strengthened by a wave of pride. Again and again there went through her heart and stomach a rush of sinking emptiness, and each time she recovered from it as from a shock, slowly, and weakly; a difficult comeback. It was that which prevented her from eating, for it came often just as she had prepared food for herself and sat down and looked at it.

She wondered at those mysterious physical activities, probably governed by the endocrine glands, which are the reactions to violent emotions. What, really, was going on in her body? Was it a sort of shell shock? Was it destroying her health and strength and youth? She could not bear to look at the face that peered back at her from the mirror.

In the timber of number sixteen the dogs appeared again, madly chasing a rabbit. Up here the shaded depressions amongst the trees held snow left from a recent storm. The rabbit was in the snow, struggling toward a pile of rocks and Kim was bearing down on it, yipping hysterically.

Nell drew rein and watched the chase, quieted by a feeling of fatalism. What chance did the rabbit have? It was like her mind—doubting and dodging, trying to find a hole in which to hide, or a path of escape, but cornered every time.

The rabbit doubled on its tracks and Kim, who always went too fast, shot past it. The rabbit was struggling to reach the rocks. No doubt he had a safe hideaway underneath them. Would he make it? Kim was almost upon him, and again the rabbit turned and dodged, and again Kim shot past and had to brake and turn and in those few seconds the rabbit reached his haven. But ah—Chaps was there too. The canny black cocker emerged from ambush at the last moment and seized his prey.

And then the kill. The tiny squeals of the rabbit—the sharp nosings of the dogs—the sudden jerks of their heads and snappings of their jaws.

No blame to them, thought Nell, as she galloped toward them and called to them to stand back. Wagging their tails proudly they stood off and looked up at her. They were panting, and their long red tongues hung, dripping, out of the sides of their mouths.

Nell picked up the big jack—it must have weighed six pounds—and asked Gypsy's consent to hang it on the saddle. Gypsy pricked her ears and drew in her chin, snorting. Nell offered it to her to smell. Gypsy sniffed the rabbit gingerly, and after that, permitted Nell to fasten it to the saddle.

The dogs watched her, well satisfied. They knew that later, when Gus skinned it, they would get their share.

The hunt and the killing of the rabbit had added to Nell's depression. She could not bear to go home. If she could ride until it was completely dark, and there would be nothing to do but pull off her clothes and fall into bed! If she could ride until she was so tired that she would be sure to sleep!

Occasionally she glanced upward to see if there were any stars, or if the moon was rising, but the sky was a solid gray lid, not low or stormy, but withdrawn and bitterly cold. It made her shiver. If there was beauty and life in Nature, where had it gone? When the skies were like this they put a blight on the world, and on the human soul.

They galloped along in the gathering darkness, the dead rabbit thudding against the mare's side.

Nell reached the stables from the south pasture. She had expected Gus to be watching for her, but no one was there, not even the dogs. She fed Gypsy, unsaddled her and turned her out. She hung the dead rabbit in the meat house and walked slowly and unwillingly down through the gorge. Physically, she was near collapse, and she walked slowly and unsteadily.

As she approached the house she suddenly stopped walking. Lights shone in all the windows and a row of cars stood behind it.

It was one of those uproarious gatherings which occur when town people descend on their country friends with all the "makings." The house was bursting with food and drink, lights and roaring fires and human noise and movement. Rob had brought T-bone steaks. Potatoes were already baking and Genevieve Scott was just putting the finishing touches to two big pumpkin pies.

When Nell stood in the kitchen door, dazed and almost unbelieving, and exclaimed, "Rob!" she was promptly enveloped in a rowdy bear hug by her husband, and thereafter by Rodney Scott and Charley Sargent. She was told to sit down and rest herself and let her guests do the cooking and set the table. Morton Harris brought her an old-fashioned cocktail. There would be nothing for Nell to do, they assured her, but make her famous dressing for the lettuce.

"And the mustard and coffee sauce for the steaks!" exclaimed Rob.

Gus was concocting the potent Swedish punch called glogg.

"And I hope," said Bess Gifford, "that there'll be room in the oven for these biscuits."

"And we'll be ready to eat at about eight-thirty," said Rob, "and until then there's nothing to do but drink up and enjoy yourself!"

Nell ran upstairs to her room. Rob is home. He kissed me. He is here! This very night they would be together in this room and all would be explained and forgotten. That dreadful loneliness—that desolation—it was all over. An easy breathing lifted her breast and it was new and pleasant and free and a great change—as if, all these weeks, a painful thong had bound her lungs.

She stood on the threshold of her bedroom, wondering if he had been there already, if there would be some sign, his coat thrown across the pillow, or his boots standing argumentatively in the middle of the floor. Instead, she saw the bed piled high with feminine wraps. Of course. The girls, and their things. Well—it would all wait.

Moving lightly and excitedly, she brushed and groomed and freshened herself and ran downstairs again.

Rob offered her another cocktail. "How's about another?" he asked jovially. "You've got to catch up to the rest of us, you know."

"Have you been here long?" she asked, raising her eyes to his as she took the glass. It was like speaking to a man she hardly knew but was desperately in love with.

His eyes met hers for a split second and then fell to the glass he was handing her. "Oh, a couple of hours!" he said.

"And I'm watching you make your salad dressing!" said Morton Harris. "I've got all the things out on this table for you!"

The radio was roaring. Bess Gifford and Charley Sargent were dancing in the middle of the living room.

It seemed to Nell she was floating on the surface of a river of sound and sensation, that lifted her higher and higher. Her body was warm and quick and pliant, the pupils of her eyes dilated, her laugh rippled. She sat at the head of the table and carved the steaks, putting a lump of butter and mustard in each slice, and a dash of black coffee and then spooning the gravy over the meat until all was blended. When, now and then, the memory of the afternoon—of all the days gone before—came back to her, she put her fork down and leaned her head back and wondered if she was drunk—so unbearably sweet was the pang of the present laid against the desolation of the past. It was over. He was here. He had kissed her. He would kiss her again tonight.

"Maybe you'll tell us, Nell!" shrieked Bess Gifford from the other end of the table. "Why is it that Rob and Charley are never so happy as when they can put their heads together and talk about how much money they lose on horses?"

"Lose on horses?" said Nell doubtfully, her eyes going to Rob's.

"Don't believe him," said Rodney Scott. "Come on now, Rob—give us the low-down. You made a mint on this sale, didn't you?"

"You don't have to ask him," shouted Stacy Gifford. "Take a look at him! See that smug grin! He busted the bank!"

ISAAC'S HERITAGE

LESSON TEXT—Genesis 24:10, 15-20, 34-36, 61-67.
GOLDEN TEXT—I have a goodly heritage.—Psalm 16:6.

The ordinary things of life become extraordinary when we recognize in them the outworking of the plan of God. Our lesson presents one of history's sweetest love stories. It would be worth reading just for that reason, but it is also the account of God's hand in the carrying forward of His promised blessing on the seed of Abraham.

For a long time it seemed that there could be no fulfillment at all, for Sarah and Abraham had no child. Then by a miracle, God gave them a beloved son.

Isaac's remarkable deliverance in the hour when it looked as though he might be taken from his father (Gen. 22:10-12) was like bringing back one who was dead (Heb. 11:18, 19).

He grew into manhood, and Abraham, good father and faithful servant of the Lord, determined that his son must have a godly wife. So in accordance with Oriental custom he sent a most trusted servant back to their homeland to choose a bride from their own kindred.

The altogether charming story unfolds in our lesson as we see

I. A Faithful Servant (v. 10).

Full instructions from Abraham and an oath that he would not take a bride for Isaac from among the Canaanites, prepared the servant for his journey. Taking with him a goodly caravan and rich presents from his master, he set out on his journey.

There is much to learn here about the need of parental concern, and their interested action in helping young people to find the right mate. We see the importance of avoiding "mixed" marriages, especially those between a believer and an unbeliever.

We see the need of constant dependence on God, for only He has the wisdom and the knowledge of human hearts which can properly join two lives together. In our day when marriage is so carelessly and casually contracted, these matters need special emphasis.

II. A Fair Damsel (vv. 15-20).

To be good to look upon is certainly a desirable thing in a woman, but it has been far too much exploited in our day. Notice that while Rebekah was very fair, she also had those qualities of character and of experience which prepared her to be a good wife for Isaac.

She was kind and willing to serve; not only did she offer water to the servant of Abraham, but promptly watered his camels. Such an attitude of heart and mind is a great asset to a woman in marriage.

She was instructed in the domestic arts. The fact that she had come to draw water indicated that, and her ability to draw the water showed that she had experienced the duties of woman in the household.

Here is wise counsel for the young man who is interested in marriage, and for his parents as they guide him. Let him look for the girl with the fair countenance if he will, but let him be sure that there is something really worthwhile behind the pretty face.

No woman, no matter how extensive her culture or how rich her family, is ready for marriage until she knows something of the responsibilities of family life and has a will to do what she can for the care and comfort of others.

III. An Honorable Proposal (vv. 24-36).

Abraham's trusted man, perceiving that God had led him to the one of His choice, at once stated his errand. There was no trickery, no smooth double-talk. This was a straight-out proposal that Rebekah come with him to be the bride of Isaac.

Notice that he made known his master's financial position, and made clear the place Rebekah would occupy as the wife of Isaac. That is as it should be. There is a contractual basis for marriage which calls for complete candor and honest dealing.

But there was more here, for Rebekah ultimately responded to the dictates of her own heart when she said, "I will go" (see v. 58). It was

IV. A Love Marriage (vv. 61-67).

Isaac, meditating in the twilight, presents a fine picture of a man spiritually ready to be a good husband. He had more to offer than riches. Let other young men follow his example.

The tender scene of their meeting, and of the love which welled up in their hearts at first sight of one another, needs no comment.

We do need to say that unless America gets back to real love marriages, our nation is destined for disaster. Matrimony based on physical attraction, improper emphasis on sex, or on convenience, will never be able to meet the stress of modern life. Love can and will do it, especially where those who thus love one another first love God.

As the Merry-Go-Round
Goes Around and Around

It was plain to see the doctor was puzzled.

"You ought to be getting well by now," he said to his patient. "Are you sure that you have carried out all of my instructions to the letter?"

"Well, doctor," said the patient, with some hesitancy, "I've done most of them, but I can't take the two-mile walk every morning as you ordered. I get dizzy long before the two miles are up."

"What do you mean 'dizzy'?" asked the doctor.

"Well, sir," said the patient, "I must have forgotten to tell you—I'm a lighthouse keeper."

Household
Hints

Add horseradish to taste to hot buttered beets. Gives them a tang. To sweeten, melt one or two tablespoons of brown sugar over all.

For the best possible fit in making slipcovers, cut each section of the cover on the grain of the material.

Since the heat is most even in the center of the average oven, that is the best place for a cake while it is baking.

When washing windows polish them with crumpled newspapers. You'll be delighted with results and resolve to use this method hereafter.

So that you can see what is on the back row of each canned-goods shelf, have fitted in stair-step shelves that raise each row of jars about two inches higher than the previous one. The number of steps depends upon the width and height of the original shelves.

Boiling in soda will remove grease and dirt from agate ware.

It's very restful to your feet if, while ironing, you will stand on a large piece of corrugated paper or a heavy rug.

Successful cleaning depends chiefly on taking a little extra care—on using clean cloths and plenty of clean water.

When washing small statues and decorated china, if a shaving brush is used it will be found to be much safer and often more thorough than an ordinary brush, which is apt to chip pieces off. China that is not in regular use is almost sure to have accumulated a certain amount of dust. It is much better to wipe off the surplus dust with a soft brush before attempting to wash it.

Firm Dealing in Skeletons
Finds Little Competition

One unique business that has no competition is that of a London firm dealing in skeletons. Medical students and doctors in all parts of the world are their customers.

In Sweden, however, teachers use crude skeletons of wood instead of the human bony structure to instruct young students in anatomy. However, the wooden skeleton bears little resemblance to the actual human frame.

SNAPPY FACTS

Tires which were introduced to the public eighteen months before Pearl Harbor, to awaken the nation to the necessity of mass production of synthetic rubber, were created after fourteen years of intensive research in synthetic rubber by B. F. Goodrich.

The Japs are reported to have reversed the process for making rubber out of oil and are making gasoline and oil out of natural rubber.

One of the largest tire repair shops overseas, operated by the Ordnance Tire Repair Company in Italy, turns out 534 repaired and recapped tires per day.

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE CHURCHES
The subject of the Lesson-Sermon in all Churches of Christ, Scientist, on Sunday, July 29, was:

"TRUTH"

The Golden Text was:

"O Lord God of hosts, who is a strong Lord like unto thee? ... Justice and judgment are the habitation of thy throne: mercy and truth shall go before thy face" (Ps. 89: 8, 14).

Among the citations which comprised the Lesson-Sermon was the following from the Bible:

"Then Pilate entered into the judgment hall again, and called Jesus, and said unto him, Art thou the King of the Jews? ... Jesus answered, My kingdom is not of this world: ... Thou sayest that I am a king. To this end was I born, and for this cause came I into the world, that I should bear witness unto the truth. Every one that is of the truth heareth my voice. Pilate saith unto him, What is truth? (John 18: 33, 36-38).

The Lesson-Sermon also included the following passages from the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," by Mary Baker Eddy:

"The question, 'What is Truth,' convulses the world. Many are ready to meet this inquiry with the assurance which comes of understanding; but more are blinded by their old illusions, and try to 'give it pause.' 'If the blind lead the blind, both shall fall into the ditch.' ... To seek Truth through belief in a human doctrine is not to understand the infinite. We must not seek the immutable and immortal through the finite, mutable, and mortal, and so depend upon belief instead of demonstration, for this is fatal to a knowledge of Science. The understanding of Truth gives full faith in Truth, and spiritual understanding is better than all burnt offerings" (223, 286).

Friends and members of other Poets in the District were well represented and a good time was had by all.

OUR RIVER

The people of Cook County are missing a bet. They are not using their Des Plaines River. The other day we took a boat trip down that river from Lake County to Lavndale Avenue in Summit. It being a week day, we saw few people other than an occasional fisherman or pairs of strolling boys. Except for a bridge now and then, there were no signs or sounds of civilization. Chicago might have been a thousand miles away. We rested. There was isolation. There was peace.

Once in a while a heron flew ahead of us, or a squirrel scampered up a tree, once we saw a family of young muskrats playing around the entrance to their den in the bank; twice we saw and heard a wood duck, again and again big fish plowed ripples surging ahead of us. It was cool and shady and still beneath the arching trees. We thought of the

A hearty welcome extended to all centuries this river had travelled. We were babes nuzzling again at the breast of Mother Nature.

Sure there were breaks and hazards. Driftwood jams against the piers of a bridge, or where a huge tree had fallen athwart the channel. A few man made dams to be portaged. Some shallow, boulder strewn straths where the boats must be poled or dragged. We wished for a canoe.

Mostly the bottom was clean and hard. The water looked and smelled like "good" water in spite of a few vomits of foul pollution. Some day a series of low dams will drown all shallow stretches. Men die. They can defile and divert, but they cannot destroy a river.

"Running Water in the barns

is a life saver!"...said Herk
(and a money and muscle saver, too)

What a flare for farming our old friend Hercules had! He was given a choice, according to the myth, of losing his head or performing twelve seemingly impossible tasks. One of these was cleaning, in a single day, the stables of 3,000 cattle. Hercules decided to keep his head by using his brain as well as his brawn—and use it he did!

By diverting the flow of the rivers, Alpheus and Peneus, so they would run through the stables, Herk flushed 'em clean in a few hours.

Nowadays, running water in your barn can do even more wonder-working jobs for you. And you, like Hercules, have rivers at your disposal.

Yes, your river may run under your farm, rather than alongside it. But even so, it's an easy matter, not a Herculean task at all, to pipe it up and into your barn where it will do a time and work-saving job of flushing...fattening livestock...boosting milk and egg production. Piped outside, it will make your garden grow more and improve its quality. It's the surest way to keep food production from dying of thirst.

Having an adequate supply of running water when and where you need it is the easiest way to keep the farm producing at full capacity...the most profitable way to produce more in less time with less labor.

Irrigation of your farm increases yields as much as 50% during a year of normal rainfall—crops thrive even in severe dry seasons, profits mount.

Milk production may be boosted as much as 10% if there's always plenty of water in the stock tank and accessible drinking fountains in the barn.

Running water in the milkhouse speeds and lightens cleaning chores...promotes greater dairy cleanliness...enables you to market better dairy products.

"Extra hand" for the farm homemaker is the running water that helps with the 101 kitchen chores. Laundry labors, too, are lightened and speeded.

"Recognize one who has served"

Electricity for running water systems is available to more than 86% of the farms in the area served by this Company.

Listen to
THE LUTHERAN HOUR"Bringing Christ to the Nations"Speaker: Dr. Walter A. Maier
Same hour each Sunday

In his first address as summer guest speaker on the International Lutheran Hour, Chaplain Commander J. Floyd Dreith, Executive Officer of the United States Navy Chaplain school, Williamsburg, Va. spoke on "The Incorruptible Seed." Emphasizing the necessity of the new birth through Christian faith, Chaplain Dreith declared: "In all of our Saviour's recorded sayings in Scripture, there is only one instance of the Divine 'must'. It was in the privacy of darkness when Nicodemus came to Him by night seeking counsel for his troubled spirit that Jesus gave utterance to these words, 'Ye must be born again'."

Declaring that our individual and collective welfare does not depend on education, scientific advancement or statesmanship, Chaplain Dreith asserted: It is my blessed privilege to offer you the one tried, tested, pure, everlasting and incorruptible seed, whereby you as an individual and thru the individual the nations can find lasting peace and happiness. The peace which men enjoy when they truly love God above all things and their fellowmen as themselves and the greater peace which can be yours in the midst of the devastation and destruction of a war torn world; yours even while you are standing by the side of the body of a loved one mangled in the machine of war, the peace which passes all understanding; the peace which comes from knowing that a loving God has forgiven you all your trespasses and will bear you up in His hands from this life to eternal glory."

Chaplain Dreith directed a portion of his address to an account of his experiences in the armed services. He was assigned to his first ship the USS Arizona and subsequently served aboard the USS Pensacola. From 1938 to 1940 he served aboard the USS Black Hawk with the Asiatic Fleet, operating in the Philippine and North China waters. On the USS Bunker Hill, an Essex carrier he served in combat duty from Rabaul to the Philippine Islands, including the Gilbert, Marshall, Marianas, Palau and Philippine campaigns with supporting strikes on Truk, Formosa Bonins and Okinawa.

My Dear Ladies:

Really I'm ashamed of myself for not writing before to thank you for my Christmas packages and my birthday gift. I had a letter written once and during a move, while riding in a truck, a can of gasoline tipped over and the gas soaked thru my musette bag and ruined my writing folio which had the letter in it. And from that time on I was one of the busy boys over here and never did get around to rewriting the letter. I remember that everything was something I needed and found useful. The box of fudge was very good and went like wild fire. It came just before Christmas and most of the packages came so early that all the candy and cakes were eaten and everybody was still hungry for sweets. Of course I had my good share before I let anyone have any. And you did just right with the generous birthday gift by letting my brother put it in the bank for me. And now please except my very late Thanks, my deepest heartfelt thanks for everything.

Since V E day we've been Special Police, guarding P. W.'s for a while and camps for Displaced Persons, people who were brought in to Germany to work in factories etc. We also handled the rations for them. And we took some back to their home land. Sorry to say I didn't get in on any of those trips.

And when the 19th German Army surrendered to the 6th Corps, it was our job to take all of their horses and get them back to the farmers, as they didn't have enough horses to do their farm work. A lot of farm work was done by manual labor because of the lack of horses. Men and women cut hay with scythes, raked it by hand and hauled it into barns on small wagons and wheel barrows. Being the only feed they have, I've seen people hauling hay during a rain.

Potatoes is the main food for the people. Now that vegetables are in season, they have radishes and onions. Once or twice a week they can have meat, and when there is no coffee, the people are given beer to drink. Milk is rationed but it can be gotten every day, the larger the number of children the more milk a family gets. The best sugar is none too good, and because of its scarcity the women can not put up much canned goods. And it has been years since people have seen white bread. Most of the bread is made of finely ground saw dust, with some flour added to it. It does not taste bad but it doesn't taste like bread.

As usual, I always take a trip whenever I can. My last trip was to Berchtesgaden, Hitler's Mountain retreat. The town is located in the bottom of a valley and the S-S Barracks where his retreat was is further up the mountainside. The barracks is completely destroyed by bombing, yet the town below it was left untouched. And right at the very top of the mountain is the place where Hitler and his henchmen made all their plans. It's commonly called the Crow's Nest. I don't know the right name. One can drive part way up the mountain and has to climb the last 150 feet or more. From the parking lot to the house is an elaborate system of tunnels which were to be used for protection. Also, under his house down at the S-S barracks, there is another system of tunnels. It's a shame that a nation had to spend millions of dollars for so fool a cause, and the leaders from the precautions they had taken, were fearful of their lives at all times.

I have been transferred to another outfit. It is a "Going Home" outfit. My old battalion is headed for the Pacific and I had no desire to go with them. I hope to be home by Christmas time. In a month or more

I expect to leave Germany for France or Belgium and after we're there a while we'll sail for home. That will be the day.

Thank you again for the present and hope there is enough charity in your hearts to forgive this old soldier for being so neglectful.

Respectfully yours,
Mark A. Hotchkiss.

The regular service club meeting will be held on Monday August 6th at the school house Meeting to start at 8 p.m. A.M.L. members are urged to attend.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Fisher of Michigan spent last week end with Mr. and Mrs. Albert Cappel. Mrs. Fisher is the former Miss Margaret Hennessey, former teacher in Mokena high school. Mr. Fisher returned to his home Monday and Mrs. Fisher and Mrs. Harold Cooper and daughter Marilyn went to Greeley, Iowa and spent part of the week with Mrs. Fisher's mother.

WHEN Tommy Holmes of the Boston Braves passed Rogers Hornsby's consecutive hitting record of 33 games, the time seemed to be about right for your correspondent to look up a few notable records that might last for generations.

One of these is Joe DiMaggio's consecutive hitting record for both leagues that totaled 56 contests. This took place in 1941. DiMaggio began collecting base hits on May 15 and finally ceased firing on the 16th of July.

Grantland Rice

Any record can be beaten, but this will be a tough one to crack. There are two other almost phantom targets that may never be surpassed. One is Lou Gehrig's consecutive game record that carried on for a matter of 14 years and more than 2,000 contests. It will take a stronger combination of steel and concrete than we have ever seen so far in one human system to pass Lou Gehrig's mark. This must stand among the incredible features of sport.

Lou began his long march in 1925 and finally came to the end of his career in 1939. The second untouchable mark belongs to Babe Ruth and his count of 60 home runs, piled up in 1927.

There is another pretty fair ball player by the name of Tyrus Raymond Cobb who has to his credit a different set of figures that no one now living will ever see equaled. This record includes a lifetime total of 2,244 runs and 4,191 hits.

Jimmy Foxx and Hank Greenberg almost caught up with Ruth's home run accumulation of 60 in a season, but no other ball player has even come close to Cobb's double mark. This same record also includes 892 stolen bases, well beyond Eddie Collins' turn of 744.

Cobb, Ruth and Gehrig, all American Leaguers, complete the trio that offers the toughest targets on the batting side of the game. And when you mention the two greatest ball players of all time, Cobb and Ruth draw most of the votes although Hans Wagner still has a stout following that refuses to be shaken loose.

Mel Ott is the most redoubtable of the National League record holders at bat—and Mel is still under way and increasing his lead. Mel sets a record of some sort every time he gets another hit or steps into another home run—insofar as the National League is concerned.

Stand-Out Pitchers

Walter Johnson, another American Leaguer, is the pitcher that stands out as the main all-time target to knock over. But for all that even Old Barney isn't so far in front of Cy Young. In fact, looking a trifle deeper into the matter, Young's mark may outlive all others. It consists largely of these figures—games pitched—906, games won—510. When you figure that Walter Johnson is in second place, 97 winning games away at 413, you get a better idea of Cy's miraculous contribution to the art of piling up victories.

One of Johnson's top marks is the count of 56 consecutive scoreless innings, compiled in 1913. That means something better than six straight shutouts. For a career run Johnson also sets up two other targets with 3,497 strikeouts and 113 shutouts, 23 beyond Grover Alexander's total.

But Old Pete must be drawn into this select society with the pitching he offered in 1916. That season, working in Philadelphia's bandbox ball park, where a looping fly was usually a homer, Alexander turned in 16 shutouts—more shutouts in one season than most pitchers can call winning games.

The two marks of 19 consecutive victories established by Tim Lincecum and Rube Marquard of the Giants, form another elusive target that many have fired at through the years in vain.

There was no record ever set that can't be broken. But those referred to in these brief dispatches are something more than records. They are landmarks. Even peering into the future, what batter is there to pile up 4,191 base hits? Or what pitcher can ever hope to win 510 games? Or what iron man can outlast Gehrig's 14 seasons of consecutive play? These are the three toughest of them all to shatter or drive away from the record pages. For all three call not only for extreme skill but also for the amazing stamina that few ever possess.

Eisenhower, Ball Player

Dear Grant—I just checked over an old Reach Guide, 1910, and found this concerning a player by the name of Wilson, General Eisenhower's alias while playing with Abilene in the Central Kansas League, season of 1909.

Play-Off

By WILLIAM RAINERY
McClure Newspaper Syndicate.
WNU Features.

L. T. STEVE WESTWIN'S pass allowed him to leave the convalescent center at two-thirty p. m. He boiled. He'd be late. Ensign Davis, the paper on the bulletin board read, challenged the winner of the center's golf tournament. At two p. m. at the Level Hill Country Club.

Steve breezed out the gate and fumed until the bus came along and he clambered in. He gripped about the situation to the bus driver as they rolled over the warm southern countryside. "Always you have to do business with some red tape winder behind a desk," he growled. "I won the tournament, fair and square. I accepted this Navy upstart's challenge for today at two o'clock. The recreation committee sent word I'd be there. Then they gave me a pass to leave at two-thirty! Don't they want the honor of the Army upheld?"

"Maybe it's part of the idea to keep you boys relaxed. Not in a hurry," the bus driver said, seeking soothing words.

"How's your boy?" Steve asked. "Had a letter yesterday. Still in the Pacific," the man said.

Steve had had no experience in that theater of operations. He had eaten desert dust, and moved on until he was tagged for shipment in the other direction—Anzio. A pretty bad arm, but they did a neat reconstruction on it. He blessed them for that. When he won the tournament on the center's course, he knew he'd be going back some day to professional golf.

Now this Navy challenger, this pretender to the golf crown between the convalescent center and the Naval Hospital nearby—well, Steve was confident.

The bus ground to a stop at the country club. "Keep your left elbow straight and watch the ball," said the driver, whose loyalty was with the Army.

"I'll win even with a cannon ball," Steve assured him.

He wore brown flannels and hoped the Navy would be in exercise clothes too. He looked at his wrist watch. Three-fifteen. It might be too much to expect the Navy to be there at all.

Extensive inquiry at the clubhouse brought Steve no knowledge of the presence or whereabouts of Ensign Davis.

He decided the center would have to send a formal apology for his lateness and went out to the first tee alone. The course looked inviting.

He played good golf to the sixth hole. A girl, also alone, was leaving the green ahead. Steve holed out and walked to the next tee. The girl had driven. She was halfway down the fairway, searching the ditch against the fence. Steve waited. Then he skipped his own drive and walked down. "Lose something?" he called, grinning, as he approached her.

"The ball. The only one I had. One measly repaint job and I lost it!" She brushed long blonde hair from her face. Steve looked hard for the ball. He looked at the girl the same way. He stopped grumbling to himself about missing the play-off.

They couldn't locate the ball. Steve produced one and bounced it on the fairway. "Use this," he offered.

"Thanks," the girl said. "I was playing better than I expected. Then I put this drive into the fence. That's what happens when you stop concentrating."

"I know," Steve said.

"Play much golf?" she asked.

Steve said he did, but hadn't until lately. No use being a bore about his pro efforts. He couldn't completely suppress curiosity about how this girl played the game, however. But the way she looked in a gray skirt and yellow blouse would justify any performance. It turned out that her game was up to her looks. That was apparent in the first shot she made with an iron straight to the green. She sank the first putt.

At the ninth hole she said, "I'll play you through to the eighteenth. That is, if I don't lose the ball." "You'd better not," Steve jibed. It was Ellen and Steve between them now. Neither one remained more than two strokes up on the other for very long. Steve was playing briskly and enjoying the companionship as well as the sport. At the seventeenth they were even.

Steve held out his hand. "Last hole, Ellen. May the best girl win." Her smile was very warm, and they played the final strokes carefully. Three apiece to the green. Ellen canned out in one putt. Steve watched her fondly. A great partner, he thought. He took two.

That's what happens when you stop concentrating, Steve thought, as they sat in the nineteenth hole with a pair of frosty glasses. But it had been a pleasure to see her win. He was wondering how to ask her for a date.

"It was fun," Ellen said. "I'm not angry at that soldier for not showing up. Ensign Ellen Davis had her game anyway."

"Who's that?" Steve asked, nearly dropping his glass.

"That's me. I'm a WAVE at the Naval Hospital." Steve decided he wouldn't tell Ensign Davis who lost the play-off until she saw him in uniform when they had the date she made with him then.

Chant of Moro Girl Gives Clew To Heroic Yanks

Her Song Reveals How Japs Killed Two American Airmen on Jolo.

JOLO.—The chant of a Moro dancing girl at a festival in the village of Parang attended by officers of the 163rd infantry, 41st division, revealed to the American authorities the story of a heroic attack by navy patrol planes on a Japanese convoy in the early days of the war, says the Associated Press.

After an elaborate feast the girl, wearing elaborate combs of gold in her braided hair and rings of pearls on her fingers, appeared before the army officer guests and to the accompaniment of the pulawatas (native cymbals) she began her chant.

An interpreter told Lt. Col. Leonard A. Wing, Bozeman, Mont., regimental executive officer, that she was singing the story of how the Japanese had come to the island, and of the fight of the Moros and of two American fliers who had been captured and executed by the Japanese with Samurai honors.

Natives Tell of Incident. The Americans became greatly interested in the story of the fliers and from many native sources were able to piece together an account of what happened.

Three days after the Japanese landed at Jolo on Christmas eve, 1941, six navy patrol bombers raided Jolo where a large concentration of enemy shipping stood off port.

The Catalinas attacked at low level, December 27, and succeeded in sinking one crowded Maru type enemy transport and a cruiser. But anti-aircraft fire was intense. Two of the Catalinas were shot down.

Moros who had watched the action said a number of men bailed out. The figure varies but the most reliable accounts indicated that at least nine men were helped by natives to reach the small island of Siasi in the Sulu group and from there taken by vinta sailing boat to Tarakan, Dutch Borneo. They escaped.

Three more fliers were killed in the crash. Their bodies were buried by natives at night without the knowledge of the Japanese. And there were two fliers whose parachutes brought them down near an enemy warship. These were the men who became heroes in the Moro legend.

As the story is told now on Jolo, the captive Americans were taken before the Japanese commander, Commodore Sizaki, who demanded that they reveal their base and the number of planes still operative. The Japanese air blitz of the Philippines still was under way at this time.

The Americans refused to tell the enemy anything but their names and serial numbers. Questioning went on for several days but the two fliers did not betray any information of value.

Then the Japanese commander called a dress parade of all his forces on Jolo. Standing at attention at Jolo air field with the Japanese flag fluttering overhead, Nip soldiers looked on stolidly while the two Americans were brought before them with their hands bound behind their backs.

Pointing to the prisoners the Japanese commander extolled them for their bravery in refusing to reveal information to an enemy. He told the Japanese troops that these Americans should serve as an example to them if they were faced by similar circumstances. Then the two fliers were given the "privilege" of dying for their country.

Their heads were cut off. The bodies were exhumed on May 4, 1945, by Chaplain Graves and reburied in the little American cemetery near Jolo.

55 Dollars a Pound Is Price of Sugar in China

CHUNGKING, CHINA.—Despite government efforts to check China's runaway prices, some commodities in Chungking cost more than 10,000 times the prewar level.

The Chungking retail price index April 30 was, by government acknowledgement, 1,250 times the level before the war broke out in July, 1937.

A pound of badly refined sugar, which used to cost 10 Chinese cents, now brings 1,100 Chinese dollars. Calculated at the official exchange rate of 20 Chinese dollars to one American dollar, the cost would be 55 American dollars a pound. At the unofficial rate of 600 to 1,000 Chinese dollars to one American dollar the cost in American money would be over $1.80 a pound.

A good American shirt costs 35,000 Chinese dollars; an orange 200; a refrigerator 1,000,000 or more and a lipstick 10,000.

Reversed Helmet Saves Life of American Soldier

MANILA.—Pfc. Joseph Montanez of Pasadena, Calif., put on his helmet backward. A Japanese bullet struck the rim and penetrated the helmet, but lost its force. Pfc. Montanez escaped injury.

Backside forwards, the helmet sat low enough to catch the bullet, which otherwise would have struck the soldier's forehead. He continued fighting throughout the night, during which his company killed 51.

The Private Papers Of a Newspaperman:

This is a personal message to a few irresponsible American women, who do not realize the headaches they are causing some of our Commanding Officers—by causing heartaches to our fighting men. . . . This message was suggested by Government and war leaders who apparently are concerned about a certain matter—and here it is.

A fighting man is only as good as his fighting heart. . . . And inside his heart he carries the woman he loves. . . . Anybody in the armed services—from the hard-boiled top sergeants to the understanding chaplains—will tell you that a fighter can best protect our country when the woman he loves is protecting his heart. . . . It is the source of a soldier's greatest strength—and it is also the possible source of his greatest trouble.

This means that a certain, thoughtless, small percentage of American women must do their duty to their country—by giving their absent fighting men more consideration. . . . It is an extremely sad occurrence when a telegram arrives in some American home—with the news that an American fighting man is a casualty. . . . It is also sad when a firing line—receives a letter telling him that his affection for the woman he loves is a casualty back home. . . . Think that over.

A Washington paper, reporting that Joe Kamp and Ed Rumely were trying to have Congressional indictments against them dismissed, quoted their counsellors as saying the indictments should be thrown out "on grounds that the subpoenas were addressed to the House sergeant at arms and not the defendants."

Oh, don't change the subject!

Many soldiers are writing this reporter because they do not understand the GI Bill of Rights. . . . The U. S. Gov't owes its fighting forces the same thorough education in their civilian rights that it insisted upon—in their military duties. . . . The American people expect each fighting man to get as much assistance under the GI Bill of Rights as that fighting man gave service under the articles of war. . . . This Gov't owes it to each fighting man to bring as much attention to his return to civil life as it put forth to bring him as a civilian into the armed services. . . . If the Gov't is able to seek out a deserter to punish him—it ought to be able to seek out its heroes to reward them. . . . Each fighting man is entitled to expert advice at Gov't expense. . . . This is more than simple justice. It is sound national policy.

It is easy to understand why the officials (responsible for the transportation of our returned men) had them ride in coaches while prisoners of war rode in Pullmans. . . . This excerpt from a soldier reveals that higher-ups give more consideration to prisoners. Look: "Gallbach, Austria: Yesterday I saw something that burned me up. I went for a ride along the Alps and saw German soldiers who had surrendered (120,000 in all), who had never been put in a prisoner's cage. Instead, they were living in the best hotels, swimming, sun-bathing, riding vehicles and probably got their gas from us men; they had all the American ciggies and food they wanted. They also carried small arms, such as pistols, rifles and machine guns. Can you imagine that? This through the courtesy of the American 7th Army. Maybe I'm on the wrong side!"

This is a short and ugly story about a war hero. His name is Cpl. Edward Majeski of Hastings, Minn. He was the first soldier from the 1st ward of that community to leave for combat duty. He served 4 years in uniform—most of that time in actual combat overseas—18 months of which he suffered in a Nazi prison camp. . . . He was wounded. . . . When he returned to Hastings there was no crowd at the station, no cheering, no bands, no paper or confetti shower, no flags. No nuttin'. . . . Only this "greeting" from a storekeeper, who had the police hand Majeski a summons and complaint. . . . Corporal Majeski was fined $10 and court costs for riding a bike on a Hastings sidewalk. . . . Whew!

Second Thoughts on Some

Second Raters:

Hitler, according to the Moscow mighties, is a suicide, the first victim of his killings people can be glad about. But the tragic part of it all is we could have had him dead by his own dirty hand a decade ago. Had one nation—France, Britain, anybody—pulled a gun on him when he marched into the Ruhr, Hitler, by compact with the High Command, was pledged to blow his looney top off.

Crossed Niagara on Rope

Of the five acrobats who have crossed Niagara falls on a tight-rope, one was a woman, Maria Spelterini. On July 20, 1876, she made two round trips over a 2-inch rope that spanned the 1,100-foot distance between the American and Canadian sides at a height of 165 feet above the whirling waters.

The World, the Peace and Andy Gribbin

An important thing about Andy Gribbin's education is that his whole early life is spent in learning the essential business of co-operation, of getting along with fellow-beings.

First, he has to learn how to fit into his immediate family, learn the give-and-take necessary to get along with brothers, sisters, elders.

Then, after a few years, his world enlarges, he is sent to school. Pretty soon he learns how to spell C-A-T. But about this same time he learns something much more valuable, which is that he mustn't pull the cat's tail because a cat is a being, and therefore entitled to certain inalienable rights.

He also learns that 1 plus 1 equals 2. But much more useful is learning that 48 equals 1, that 48 states make 1 nation, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.

As Andy grows up his world will continually expand. At church, at school, in business. And through it all will run the theme of cooperation, of getting along with people of different religious, political and economic beliefs; with people some of whom he doesn't even like.

But—the tragedy of world history is that the Andy Gribbins have not learned that in a constantly shrinking world, co-operation must extend beyond the borders of the country; that just as it is necessary to get along with neighbors and neighbor states, so is it necessary to get along with neighbor nations.

And today, with no spot on earth more than sixty hours away by plane, with oceans shrunk to the width of rivers, with the age of rocket-travel upon us, all nations are neighbor nations.

There are hopeful signs that finally we are awake to this.

Even so, a lack of determination, of responsibility, of effort could again ruin the peace and set the stage for World War 3.

What can you do to help make sure that war will never come? You can . . .

First, get and keep yourself informed about the specific proposals for peace and international cooperation which are now before us.

Second, interest your friends in these questions. Get them discussed in groups to which you belong.

Third, write what you think to your Congressman and Senators, to your newspaper. Declare your self.
